SOUTH SEA PICTURES SHOWN

The Chronicle says: Alvin Seale showed an interesting lot of pictures last evening in the Academy of Sciences, illustrating a talk on his visit to the South Sea Islands. They were secured recently while he was executing a roving commission from the Bishop Museum of Honolulu. Trusting that all would be well, Seale made excursions far into the interior of islands where the inhabitants live altogether on the coast; he went from one island to another on a devil-beating tour and he hobnobbed with cannibals. One photograph thrown on the stereopticon screen was that of an old cannibal, who is said to have eaten more human flesh than any other in all the islands. Conquest and civilization have caught him, and for his last man-eating feast the English Government gave him some months in prison. At one time Seale thought his time had come, because he had taken some famous devil sticks for the Bishop Museum, but his life was saved, also the sticks for his employers.

The greatest variety of tropical scenery was shown, and passing snaps at islands where no white men have dared to venture, places where the natives of adjoining islands say only wild men live.

New Pacific Steamers.

H. A. Allan of the Allan line is a director of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.
